PROTECTIVE COATINGS

WIWA Herkules GX PFP

Fire and its heat present a great risk to life and property.

Passive fire protection is primarily used to maintain the functionality of buildings, pipelines and containers for a defined period of time, since at temperatures of approx. 550°C the critical core temperature is reached and buildings are at risk of collapse. In the event of a fire, the flame retardant material foams up, thus limiting the temperature development in the respective critical range over time. This saves important time for rescue and evacuation measures.
